Acknowledgments This book has benefited from the generous assistance of more people—students, friends, and colleagues—than I can here thank individually. But four names do demand mention. Michael O’Connell has been involved in the project from the beginning; Mark Rose got drawn in soon after; Jackson Cope and Daniel Javitch have been active in its last stages. The advice of all four has improved the book, and their encouragement has made its writing a more pleasant experience. I am also indebted to the National Endowment for the Humanities for a fellowship that allowed me a year of uninterrupted work, to the Academic Senate at the University of California, Santa Barbara, for travel, research, and secretarial assistance, and to the editors of PMLA and ELH for permission to reprint material that first appeared in the pages of those journals.
